51. Read the passage below and answer the questions that follow in full sentences.

My name is Betty Atim. I am a pupil in Nkoma Junior School, Mbale. And I am the Head prefect of the school. Our school organizes health parades once a week. All pupils come together and so do all teachers.

On this day, teachers inspect pupils' personal hygiene. They see to it that the children keep themselves clean in all ways.

"Fingernails must not be long," the teacher on duty emphasizes. "This is because there can be dirt under them."

The teachers also find out whether we are dressed in clean and ironed uniform and we have brushed our teeth. They check our hair to see that it is clean. It is not as simple as one may think. They do a lot.

However, there are some stubborn children who tend to dodge behind other children. Whenever a teacher goes to where they are standing, they hide. This is not good. As pupils, we ought to stay healthy. This is by keeping ourselves clean. We keep ourselves clean by brushing our teeth, bathing, keeping our nails and hair short, and by washing and ironing our clothes. If we don't do some of these things, we shall fall sick. And when we fall sick, we shall miss a lot. We shall miss lessons, our friends, and worst of all, our examinations.

Long live our teachers who ensure that we live a healthy life! You are great indeed!

People call you wireless
You are in every family to send,
Spoken words and sounds from a distance,
Through sound waves,
You give us the good and bad news,
Adverts and announcements.

In people's families you sit,
On tables and stools,
Sometimes you are in pockets,
With your aerial sharp pointed,
For clear and better signals,
Of the messages you give us.

You educate, entertain and inform,
Your creator Patrick must be praised,
For giving birth to you in 1920,
Otherwise we would be ignorant,
About the world.

What would people do without you,
The football fans,
Where would they get the sports new?
Daddy says you shouldn't leave home,
He promises to repair you when you break.
