One day, as Muntu was returning home from his coffee shamba, he met a wild dog. At first he thought it was friendly. So, he raised a finger as he called it. The dog jumped and bit his finger. When he screamed, the animal dashed away.

There was no one to give him first aid. He tried to stop the bleeding by himself but he couldn't. So he quickly ran home and when his wife saw the injured finger, she got very scared.

She then ran to call a neighbor who could carry Muntu on the bicycle to a nearby hospital. By the time she returned, Muntu had already breathed his last. It was shocking news to all the people of Kibu Village. Men, women and children wailed when they saw Muntu's body.
