Okello was happy that the term had finally ended. It had been a difficult term. He was in a new class. Everything was strange throughout the term. Apart from the subjects, the topics and teachers were new.

But the class had one thing that was not in other classes. The teachers were very friendly. They encouraged the pupils to work hard and prepare for primary seven the next year.

Okello's parents were very happy when he presents to them a report with a first grade. In addition he had come with a well written plan for the holidays. Among the things on the plan was current affairs. This excited Mr. Oddu. Instead of the usual radio he decided to buy a television set. This would make his son enjoy the and information more.

On Friday, when Okello was only one day at home, his father asked him to go together to town. They took a bus and, at Wekolele Electronics Store, they alighted. They Entered the shop and Okello saw the different types of television sets for the time. How beautiful they looked!

Looking at all of them Okello suggested to his father that the flat-screen SOVO television was his choice. Mr. Oddu agreed to pay two hundred thousand shillings for the machine.

When they went back home, Okello's sister, Joyce, was the first to see them. She welcomed her brother on seeing the television. She would now stop going to the neighbours to watch her favourite Cooking Programme. She would now spend the Friday afternoons at home. As for Mr. Oddu, now he would have his radio for himself alone! Pollution, pollution
What a danger you are!
At the mention of your name,
All living things are scared!

You destroy everything,
Water bodies lose clean water
The atmosphere has fresh air no more
All the plant food escapes from the soil!

You use a sweet tongue,
Tempting all women and men of weak minds
In doing what they know is wrong
Only to realize the truth when it's very late

Wake up all who love your country,
Say no to pollution
Protect your lives from disease infection,
Put rubbish where it won't reach your nose.
