Last week, we went to the Uganda Wildlife Education Centre in Entebbe. It is a special place where wild animals and birds are kept in cages. They are kept in cages for three reasons. The first one is to enable the visitors to see them any time they arrive at the centre. Secondly is to protect them from enemies like poachers who capture or kill them. Thirdly is to control disease by ensuring that animals' movements are limited.

The people who visit this centre come from different places; some of them come from foreign lands. Others come from within the country. These include, school children, university students, company workers and individual families.

The management at the centre usually charges entry fees. This money is used to buy food and medicine for the animals and birds. It is also used to pay the workers for their services at the centre.
