(Questions 51 to 55 carry 10 marks each)

There are more species of insects than all animals added altogether. The study of insects is called entomology. It is extremely important that we learn about insects since some of them do some damage to man, his animals, crops, stores of food and materials.

Despite the terrible damage and diseases caused by some insects, there are benefits that man generally gets from insects. Insects pollinate crops. This is their most important role to man.

Some insects also produce commercially important products: bees produce honey and wax; the silk worms produce the fine silk threads that are used in the manufacture of expensive fabrics.

Insects are grouped under arthropods. They have common characteristics such as exoskeleton, jointed legs and segmented bodies. Their bodies are divided into three distinct parts, that is, head, thorax and the abdomen. The head, the first part of the body, comprises the feelers and the compound eyes.

The second part of the body is the thorax and this consists of three segments which bear three pairs of legs. The insect with its three pairs of legs can easily be differentiated from spiders which have four pairs.

The abdomen is the third part of the body. The segments of the abdomen have no legs but contain various organs of the reproductive system. In some insects there is a structure at the back-end of the abdomen which has various functions; for example, egg-laying as seen at the back end of bush crickets, or for causing a painful sting, as seen at the back-end of wasps.
