Uganda today has a colourful media industry. But this has not been the case. Because of Uganda's unstable political past, media had not had a chance to overgrow under the political disorder and dictatorship of former presidents.

Over the last 25 years, there has been significant growth in this media industry of Uganda and a lot of improvement has been made in terms of media freedom. Today, the media industry of Uganda is one of the most active and successful sectors of Uganda's economy because of how much income it generates to the government.

Print media alone has given birth to The New Vision, The Monitor, The Red Pepper and many other local newspapers. The Electronic media on the other side has given rise to several radio and television stations.

This has not only promoted community connectivity but also community awareness in the day to-day aspects of life.

The Eastern part of Uganda alone has about ten radio stations between 2000 and 2015. In Tororo, we find Rock F.M. a privately owned radio.

To people that do good

Whenever they do so.

To remember to return
